Riders pick up Heenan

Prospect. Huskies offensive lineman was No. 1 selection in CFL's Canadian college draft

MORGAN MODJESKI
morgan.modjeski@metronews.ca

University of Saskatchewan Huskies offensive lineman Ben Heenan said his dreams became reality Thursday morning when the Roughriders announced he would be their No. 1 pick in the 2012 CFL draft.

The Roughriders stayed true to their word, taking Heenan as the first-overall pick in the Canadian college draft.

"No one expects more out of myself than me, so I'm just looking forward to staying in Saskatchewan," said Heenan, from Grand Coulee, Sask., at the Huskies Football Foundation's Dogs' Breakfast in Saskatoon, where the announcement was made.

"Right now it's just kind of an overwhelming moment to be here with over 2,000 Huskies supporters, my teammates and family," said Heenan. "They really wanted to make it a big deal for not only myself, but the program and the Huskies.

"For the Riders to ... select me, it really means a lot."

Jim Hopson, Riders president and CEO, said the team is excited to have Heenan.

"Given Ben's past playing ball in Regina, playing up here, his character — just everything. We think Ben's going to be a guy who's going to play a long time with the Saskatchewan Roughriders," said Hopson.

Two-speed economy

Saskatchewan's economy to set pace: BMO

The latest provincial outlook from the Bank of Montreal is a stark reminder that Canada has an entrenched two-speed economy.

The bank predicts the four western provinces, led by Alberta and Saskatchewan, will be the only ones to record growth above two per cent this year. All the rest are below what the Bank of Canada considers the potential growth rate for the Canadian economy.

The West will also lead the nation in growth next year, the bank says, though oil-rich Newfoundland will be joining that select group.

BMO says resources are the major reason for the superior prospects of the western provinces. THE CANADIAN PRESS

Blades score big in bantam draft

The Saskatoon Blades made some big trades at the WHL bantam draft on Thursday.

Jessey Astles and Shane McClogan are coming to the Blades from the Kelowna Rockets. In return, the Rockets got centre Ryan Olsen and the Blades' second and fifth draft picks in the 2012 bantam draft. Coming to the Blades from the Brandon Wheat Kings is Brendan Walker. In return, the Wheat Kings got the Blades' second-round pick in 2012, their second-round pick in the 2013 bantam draft and their third-round pick in the 2014 bantam draft. With their first pick in the draft, the Blades selected centre Cameron Hebig, a Saskatchewan native who played with the Saskatoon Frostbite this season. METRO

Health-clinic services could face the knife

College of Medicine. Restructuring at U of S is putting strain on system

JANE CAULFIELD
angela.mullins@metronews.ca

Two primary health-care teaching clinics — one in Borden and the other in Saskatoon — could see a drop in services as the University of Saskatchewan's College of Medicine undergoes a major restructuring.

"We will have to move patients, not move doctors," Dr. Alanna Danilkewich, head of the family-medicine department, said about the primary health clinic in Borden.

The Borden clinic gives students the opportunity to care for patients in a rural setting. Danilkewich said it's "a wonderful teaching site" and she'd "hate to see it go."

The university offers one full day of service and six days of on-call service to the clinic in Borden. Danilkewich says the full day of clinical teaching hours could be dropped and replaced with seven days of on-call service.

She says the number of teaching doctors recently dropped to nine from 12, and recruiting new doctors to fill the positions has been difficult.

"People want stability, and if something is restructuring, it's not stable," she said.

The interprofessional West Winds Primary Health Centre in Saskatoon is run by the department of family medicine in conjunction with the Saskatoon Health Region. West Winds sees nearly 2,000 patients a month.

"While we are in transition, patients without a family doctor will have to put up with an on-call service," Danilkewich said about West Winds. "Preventative health care and chronic-disease management — well, we'll just have to fit those in as best as possible."

But Dr. William Albritton, dean of the College of Medicine, disagrees.

"The restructuring won't affect (the clinic) at all. In that site, they do research," he said.

The college is at risk of being put on probation or losing its accreditation altogether. One of the main problems is that too few faculty members teach classes or conduct research.

Student Dr. Kieran Conway sees a patient at Westside Community clinic, one of many that participate in clinical teaching. Restructuring of the U of S College of Medicine means community physicians will do more clinical teaching, which could overload doctors. CONTRIBUTED

Hustling for health

- West Winds Primary Health Centre opened in 2006, while Borden Primary Health Centre opened in 2000.
- The department of family medicine has some 9 5 residents and expects to see 40 to 45 graduate students this year.

Drug bust. Toronto men face charges after cocaine seized

The spoils of Wednesday's bust. CONTRIBUTED

Six men from Toronto are facing charges in a dial-a-dope operation running out of Saskatoon.

The arrests were the result of an investigation by the Saskatoon Integrated Drug Unit that began in March. On Wednesday, the men, ranging in age from 25 to 31, were arrested. They appeared in court on Thursday afternoon.

Officers searched a home in the 1200 block of Avenue D North and a hotel room in the 2100 block of Avenue B North. Those searches resulted in seizure of seven ounces of cocaine and crack cocaine. Police also uncovered $20,000 in cash and a number of bank cards.

Officers laid 19 trafficking charges and a 25-year-old man was also charged with escape from lawful custody after he "pushed and ran from officers," police said. METRO

Morgan Freeman. Student filmmakers pursue actor

A catastrophic hard drive failure has led a pair of film school students on an epic odyssey to convince Hollywood icon Morgan Freeman to narrate their project

Ian MacDougall and Mackenzie Warner, his classmate at Simon Fraser University, had a week to track him down.

MacDougall heard Freeman would be the MC at a blues concert in Clarksdale, Mississippi. Bill Luckett, who co-owns the bar with Freeman there, heard their story and agreed to call Freeman on his cell phone and make the pitch.

The answer? Freeman chuckled, and said they'd have to talk to his agent before he could commit to anything. They still hope to get Freeman's participation in narrating the documentary about finding him.

Tuition hike. Numbers behind Quebec debate

Tuition has been mostly frozen in Quebec for 43 years, but there is little evidence this has increased university enrolment. Only about 30 per cent of Quebec's young people go to university — six percentage points less than the national average, according to a study published by the Higher Education Quality Council of Ontario.

Atlantic Canada has a 50 per cent enrolment rate — even though average tuition fees there are roughly double that of Quebec's.

The study suggests the cost of tuition does not have a noticeable effect on university enrolment rates, but that the most important factor for enrolment rates is actually generational. Young people are more likely to go to university if their parents did, regardless of income.

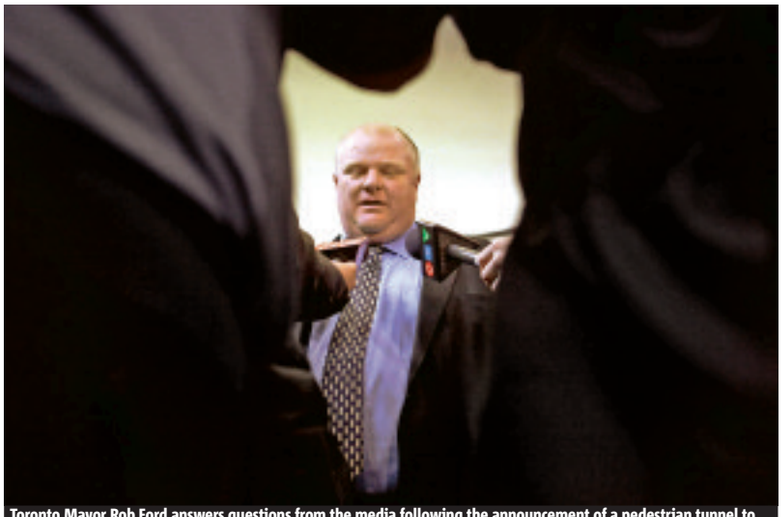
Toronto Mayor refuses media scrums with reporter

A different scrum. Police were called over an incident involving a Toronto Star scribe snooping around Rob Ford's property



Toronto Mayor Rob Ford answers questions from the media following the announcement of a pedestrian tunnel to be constructed to Billy Bishop Airport in Toronto on March 9. PAWEL DWULIT/THE CANADIAN PRESS

Toronto Mayor Rob Ford says he won't talk to any media in the presence of a reporter he accuses of spying on his home.

Ford told radio station AM640 this morning he wants Toronto Star reporter Daniel Dale removed from covering city hall in light of last night's confrontation.

Police were called to the mayor's west Toronto home after a neighbour saw someone who appeared to be in the mayor's backyard with a recording device.

The Star says Dale was on public property next to Ford's home and was there to research a story about a piece of land Ford wants to buy. The paper says Dale was not there to harass Ford.

A visibly angry Ford held a press conference outside his home on Wednesday night and said it's unbelievable what the reporter did, adding when he confronted Dale, the journalist dropped his phone and recorder before running away.

Dale's version of events, posted on the Star's website, says Ford yelled and charged at him with one fist up even though the reporter pleaded for him to stop.

Ford said this morning he "never laid a hand on" Dale but stressed he doesn't want to see the reporter in any media scrums.

"I will not be talking to any reporters if he is part of that scrum," he told AM640.

This isn't the first time Ford has been involved in a dust-up with a member of the media.

In October, Ford called 911 after Mary Walsh of the CBC's comedy series "22 Minutes" confronted him in his driveway dressed as her Marg Delahunty, Princess Warrior character.

Witnesses detail island shootings

Norway massacre.
Ferry captain describes his 'angst and full panic' after Breivik began Utoya island slaughter

Witnesses in Norway recounted Thursday how mass murderer Anders Behring Breivik — armed and in police uniform — managed to trick his way onto a ferry to Utoya island, where he massacred 69 people in a shooting spree just hours after killing eight people in a bomb attack.

Jon Olson, captain of the MS Thorbjoern ferry, told the Oslo District Court about his "angst and full panic" as he frantically tried to contact police about the island attack after his ferry had docked at Utoya.

Breivik has admitted to the bombing in Oslo's government district and the subsequent shootings at a Labor Party youth camp on Utoya.

He claims the July 22 attacks were "necessary" and that the 77 victims had betrayed Norway by embracing immigration.

Olson, who lost his partner, Monica Boesei, the second person to die in the shootings, said neither he nor his crew suspected the uniform-clad Breivik to be anything other than a police officer.

Furor widens over jailed ex-leader's treatment

Jailed ex-premier of Ukraine Yulia Tymoshenko says she was injured by prison guards who were taking her to hospital. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

German Chancellor Angela Merkel urged Ukrainian leaders on Thursday to give jailed ex-Premier Yulia Tymoshenko "proper treatment" for her ailments, as more top officials announced they would boycott the Euro 2012 soccer championship co-hosted by Ukraine.

Merkel insisted that she had not yet decided whether to stay away from the matches in Ukraine, but said her priority now was the former leader's health.

Euro 2012 is the continent's most prestigious soccer tournament, taking place only once every four years. The dispute over Tymoshenko, Ukraine's top opposition figure, is coming as a big blow to the country's hopes of using the tournament to boost tourism and trade with the 27-nation European Union. Ukraine, which is not in the EU, is co-hosting with EU member Poland.

"Much more important than my travel plans is that we must now do everything possible to see that Yulia Tymoshenko gets the proper treatment," Merkel was quoted as saying by the Koelner Stadt-Anzeiger newspaper. "Our offer stands for her to receive this medical treatment in Germany."

European Union President Herman Van Rompuy, meanwhile, announced Thursday he would not travel to any of the matches in Ukraine, joining other top officials such as European Commission President Jose Manuel Barroso and the governments of Austria and Belgium.

Tymoshenko, 51, is on a hunger strike to protest alleged mistreatment in an Ukraine prison where she is serving a seven-year sentence on charges of abusing her power while in office. She claims guards punched her while forcibly taking her to a hospital to be treated for debilitating back pain.

The West has criticized her sentence as being politically motivated for Tymoshenko is a big rival of Ukrainian President Viktor Yanukovych. His government has denied any claims of bias in the case.

"The Tymoshenko case has dramatically darkened the chances of Ukraine improving its image during the Euro," Ukrainian political analyst Vadym Karasyov said. "Ukraine will be judged not by how well it organizes a European sporting event, but by Tymoshenko's case, the political repressions, the bruises on Tymoshenko's body that she said she got in prison."

In Warsaw, Polish Prime Minister Donald Tusk said while he is disturbed by Ukraine's treatment of Tymoshenko and is urging Ukraine to observe international human rights standards, he will not back a boycott of the June 8-July 1 Euro 2012 tournament.

"I have appealed multiple times to the authorities in Ukraine not to let politics ruin this national celebration and nothing will affect our determination to fight for human rights and alleviate the situation of Yulia Tymoshenko," he told reporters.

Bob Barker opens sanctuary for HIV-infected chimps

Retired game-show host and animal-rights advocate Bob Barker is opening a new area for five HIV-infected chimpanzees at a sanctuary in northwestern Louisiana.

The former host of The Price Is Right donated $380,000 to create space at the Chimp Haven near Shreveport.

The animals came from a sanctuary in Texas that closed because of overcrowding and a lack of money.

Other sanctuaries took in the rest of the animals, but none would take the five chimpanzees because of their illness.

The chimps, named Doc, JoJo, Murphy, Flick and Pierre, will be taken in by Barker's new venue.

Barker said he learned about the animals from his friend Nancy Burnet, president of United Activists for Animal Rights.

They recently flew out together from California to see the new habitat.

Presidential politics

Romney says Chinese dissident abandoned by U.S.

Mitt Romney has criticized the Obama administration for allowing a blind Chinese dissident to leave the U.S. Embassy in Beijing.

Campaigning in Virginia, the Republican presidential candidate said reports that American officials allowed Chen Guangcheng to leave the embassy represented a "dark day for freedom," and a "day of shame for the Obama administration."

Chen took refuge at the embassy after escaping house arrest.

He rejected a deal that was supposed to keep him safely in China and now says he wants to leave the country. Chen has told media outlets he feels abandoned by the U.S.

American officials said they had not pressured him to leave U.S. protection. Romney says the U.S. should be a "place of freedom." He suggested the administration abandoned Chen.

Rituals case

Zimbabwe women cleared of rape charges

Prosecutors in Zimbabwe said they have dropped charges against three women accused of raping men to collect their semen for tribal rituals after DNA tests failed to link them to 17 men who claimed they were victims.

Prosecutors said Thursday that DNA evidence cleared the women, who will now face prostitution charges.

The women and a male companion were arrested in November on charges of "aggravated indecent assault" amid allegations they lured men into a car and forced them to have sex at gunpoint, knifepoint or using drugged drinks to collect semen for tribal rituals.

Police said 31 condoms containing semen were found in the car.

In a case that has fascinated the nation, the women denied the allegations, saying they had sex for money and didn't throw out the condoms.

Saving a life — one tweet at a time

Finding a donor. Woman with genetic condition believes social media can help spread the word about donating bone marrow

LIA GRAINGER
For Metro

Cristina Di Corte remembers the day she found out she had mitochondrial neurogastrointestinal encephalopathy — it was the same day she learned that a bone marrow transplant could save her life. It was also the beginning of an ambitious coast-to-coast social media campaign to find a donor match.

"It was really scary to finally find out what I have," says the 22-year-old Mississauga native of that day last November.

If you've never heard of the disease, also known by its acronym MNGIE, you're not alone. The genetic condition has only ever been diagnosed in 70 people worldwide and is so rare that most doctors have never heard of it.

Di Corte first started noticing symptoms when she was 17, but it would be four years before she was accurately diagnosed. The condition affects the muscles that move material through the digestive system, so much of what Di Corte ate would sit in her system and rot. A hairdresser at Erin Mills Town Centre, she became so exhausted that she was unable to work.

"I was nauseous, throwing up, and had horrible stomach pains," says Di Corte. Already a naturally slim woman at 98 pounds, her weight dropped to as low as 68 pounds. A series of doctors and specialists misdiagnosed her with irritable bowel syndrome, tested her for celiac disease and colon cancer, and even sent her to a clinic for people with eating disorders.

To finally be able to name the disease was little comfort though, as it came with the news that she would need a bone marrow transplant.

"I basically need it as soon as possible," says Di Corte, who now receives nutrients through a central catheter line and is back up to 80 pounds. Unfortunately, her mother, father and brother are not matches. Di Corte is registered with OneMatch.ca, a stem cell and marrow donor network, but they warned her that the list is long.

OneMatch.ca

All that's required to register with Canada's stem cell and marrow network is a simple, non-invasive cheek swab — and you don't even need to see a doctor to do it.

- Individuals can go to OneMatch.ca and order a free swab kit. A YouTube video explains how to take the swab and then the samples are simply popped back in the mail, postage paid.

That's when her older brother had an idea. "He was like, why don't we put this on Facebook?" says Di Corte.

A Facebook event asked friends and family to tweet #hopeforcristina on Twitter every Wednesday at 6 p.m., and the call has been a trending topic in Canada three times. She also has her own website, Helpingcristina.org, and it wasn't long before Di Corte was telling her story on Citytv.

"I think if more young people knew about OneMatch and how easy it is to be tested, they would register," says Di Corte. "You could save someone's life."

Cristina Di Corte explains her condition during an interview with Citytv in this screen grab. CONTRIBUTED

RIM shares plunge to near 9-year low

Market. BlackBerry maker's shares fall below $12 after reports suggested the company would ditch physical keyboard

The Canadian company that revolutionized the mobile phone industry spent a very expensive week trying to sell the idea that the BlackBerry isn't a dying technology, only to see its share price close Thursday at its lowest level in nearly a decade.

Research In Motion stock fell 72 cents, or 5.7 per cent, to close at $11.91 on the Toronto Stock Exchange.

It hasn't been below $12 since 2003.

Thursday's plunge marked three days of declines that began after the Waterloo tech giant gave a first glimpse of its much-anticipated new operating software at its annual developer conference in Orlando, Fla.

The BlackBerry 10 OS prototype was handed to developers in the hope of getting them onside and writing applications for the system, but it won't hit the market for several months.

RIM's shares have fallen some 15 per cent since Tuesday's reveal of the operating system. At its height the stock was trading at more than $144 in 2008, when RIM was briefly the most valuable company on the Toronto Stock Exchange.

During the conference, RIM chief executive Thorsten Heins was forced to confront rumours that the new BlackBerry would feature only a touchscreen keyboard and not a physical keypad.

The confusion arose after Heins unveiled the new operating system and focused on some flashy features available to touchscreen users, but didn't address any future plans for keypad devices. Some reports suggested the company would completely ditch the physical keys that helped build its name and are favoured by many of its users.

"We won't lose the focus on physical keypads. It would be wrong, just plain wrong to do this," Heins said.

Pipeline. Keystone XL future uncertain

TransCanada won't confirm a report in the Washington Post that it will reapply for its controversial Keystone XL pipeline as soon as Friday.

A person familiar with TransCanada's plans spoke to the Post on the condition of anonymity because a formal announcement has not yet been made, the newspaper said Thursday.

CEO Russ Girling told reporters following TransCanada's annual general meeting last Friday that the new application is "imminent." Company spokesman Terry Cunha said Thursday that Girling's comment still stands, with no specific date being provided.

The Obama administration rejected the $7.6-billion US project earlier this year, though it left the door open for TransCanada to take another crack at it.

The White House says the decision had less to do with the Alberta-to-Texas pipeline's merits than moves by Republicans in Congress to speed up the process.

IT'S SNOOKI CALLING THE POT BLACK

THE LIST
Mike Benhaim
Metro

1 Same old story: You know the one — lady's philandering husband spends all her money, then leaves for a hotter, richer woman. Spurned lady spends a year feeling dirty and used, and just when she's begun to move on, he returns with flowers and playful charms. Still vulnerable, she crumbles, and her friends throw up their arms saying, "He's not even that good looking." In other news, Conrad Black returns to Canada.

2 Let it be written: As an example of necessity being the "mother of invention," researchers at Arizona State University have released a list of "commandments" for Facebook. Issues covered by the rules: acknowledging postings to your page by clicking "Like," inappropriate "poking" (never wise), and posting pictures of friends from a debauched weekend in Vegas. My favourite edict, not limited to FB, is "Thou shalt use common sense," which, ironically, supersedes a need for the list to begin with.

3 Carrot caution: A study released Wednesday out of Ohio University has found that consuming excessive amounts of beta carotene might not be good for you. Contrary to what we've been told for centuries, it can block some effects of vitamin A critical to vision, skin health, metabolism and immune function. Vision? It goes to show you just can't trust your mom anymore.

4 Playing hardball: Two years after Victoria's Secret combined two of men's favorite things by releasing their line of baseball-themed lingerie, they introduce the Blue Jays collection. With two types of sexy briefs (one leopard print), and two skimpy tees, they've given new meaning to the phrase "Sliding into home."

5 United we stand: Canadian awards shows the Genies and the Geminis, are joining forces to create just one all-encompassing program. This is great news for apathetic Canadians who now only have to not watch one show.

6 Labour days: Jessica Simpson has given birth to a 22-inch, nine-pound, 13-ounce baby girl. This explains the tremendous baby bump that prompted pregnant Jersey Shore star Nicole "Snooki" Polizzi to say, "I'd die if I ever got that big." Aw, Snooki, we don't want you to die. We just want you to go away. Gone.

7 Hoops! My bad: Some are saying the stress of the condensed NBA season has resulted in a post-season riddled with injuries. None more symbolic than when Knicks' Amare Stoudemire tempered the burning flames of his competitive passion after a brutal loss to Miami by punching a fire extinguisher. Someone might have mentioned requiring the hand to play out the series. Surprisingly, Amare skipped college to go pro.

8 Canadian courtship: Our nation's first TV Bachelor is CFL wide receiver Brad Smith, who can't wait to meet all the wonderful women who will join him in this consummate quest for love. He seeks independent, intelligent women who are "just as confident in a ponytail and sweats as they are all dressed up." And adds that high-maintenance women turn him off. Relax, Brad. Any intelligent woman willing to endure weeks of public judgment, cat fights and drama, all to potentially marry a CFL player, is probably not high-maintenance.

Edvard Munch

Work of art sells for historic price

NEW YORK. Edvard Munch's The Scream made history on Wednesday night when it became the most expensive piece of art ever sold at auction.

After a fierce bidding war at Sotheby's New York, the 1895 pastel went to an anonymous buyer for $119.9 million US. The auction house was thrilled at the "historic" price on a night when sales topped $330 million US.

Simon Shaw, the head of impressionist and modern art for Sotheby's, said the painting was a good deal.

"If ever there was a work of art of true shock and awe, it is Edvard Munch's The Scream, which is not only one of the seminal images from art history, but also one of the visual keys to the modern consciousness."

The work is one of four versions by the Norwegian expressionist artist and was the only one still privately owned.

It is regarded as the most prized of the four as a poem written by the artist is on the frame.

Scream-worthy poetry

"I was walking along the road with two friends. The Sun was setting — The Sky turned a bloody red And I felt a whiff of Melancholy — I stood Still, deathly tired — over the blue-black Fjord and City hung Blood and Tongues of Fire. My Friends walked on — I remained behind — shivering with Anxiety. I felt the great Scream in Nature."

Munch's poem written in blood red paint

By the numbers

What can you buy with $120 million US?

- 60,000 classic British telephone boxes
- 20,000 tigers
- 40 Stradivarius violins
- 15 light jets
- Six holidays at the International Space Station
- One Cristiano Ronaldo

60 seconds

Modern art specialist Philip Hook

Why has this work of art been so popular?

It's one of the most important pictures ever in terms of fame and familiarity because it captures the modern man with his angst and alienation. It marked a new phase at the start of the 20th century when artists began portraying their own emotions.

What moral lessons can be found in it?

There is a comment on man's relationship with nature, but also it is based on guilt. When Munch painted this his father had just died and his sister was in a lunatic asylum.

RICHARD CROUSE AND MARK BRESLIN

Putting the 'super' in superhero films

Roundup. Richard Crouse and Mark Breslin dish on their favourite vigilante features

Richard: Mark, even though the ads guaranteed I would believe a man could fly, I'm not sure that my fifteen-year-old self actually thought Christopher Reeve was circling the earth in Superman: The Movie, but I do know I thought it was cool. And still do. I've seen it dozens of times and its blend of humour, action and nostalgia is worth its weight in Kryptonite.

Mark: The first Superman movie was the platinum standard in superhero films: graceful, even poetic. The sequels ruined its goodwill, but the quality of the original cannot be denied. But I think the world can be divided into two kinds of people: Superman people and Batman people, and I, Richard, seem to be a Batman person. Even the weakest in the Batman franchise still enthralls me; if we're talking about Christopher Nolan's The Dark Knight, we may be talking Godfather-level cinema.

RC: Of the big name superheroes we haven't mentioned Spider-Man yet. I liked the first Sam Raimi web slinger movie, complete with Tobey Maguire and the upside down kiss, but even cooler is Darkman. Raimi created the Darkman character out of frustration after failing to get the screen rights to The Shadow and Batman. Liam Neeson plays the swashbuckling hero in this violent and funny movie.

MB: Darkman is a dark horse entry, but yes, it's a good one and Neeson is fantastic in it. Wish I could share your enthusiasm for Spider-Man but I spent the entire movie wishing the dweeb would grow a pair. More like Spider-Boy to me. The series I prefer is the X-Men franchise, which seems to get more sophisticated with each release. And the Wolverine spin-off is a definite fave.

RC: I liked Wolverine's R-rated cameo in X-Men: First Class. Cool, underrated movie and his unfit-for-publication-in-a-family-paper-line is very memorable. Also memorable are a few movies about a lesser tier of superheroes. Everyone knows Batman and Superman, but how about Captain Invisible, the alcoholic hero who comes out of hiding to save America from destruction? Or the strange and funny Orgazmo from the twisted minds of South Park's Matt Stone and Trey Parker?

MB: And what about the lonely comic book superheroes never immortalized on film? When, oh when, will they make that masterpiece starring The Flash??? The scene where he'd do his taxes in three seconds flat would be worth the price of admission!

Synopsis

Lately it seems you couldn't swing Thor's hammer in a theatre without hitting a superhero movie, like this weekend's The Avengers, but movies about caped crusaders and heroes who can leap buildings in a single bound are nothing new. This week the Reel Guys use their superhuman powers to pick the best superhero movies of all time.

SCENE

Scene in brief

D'Angelo sparkles

D'Angelo is making his comeback: the reclusive singer will give his first U.S. performance in 10 years at the 2012 Essence Music Festival. D'Angelo will perform during the festival's opening night. It runs from July 6 to July 8 in New Orleans and also features Trey Songz, Aretha Franklin, Mary J. Blige and many others. The soul singer's latest album is 2000's Voodoo. It went platinum and won two Grammy Awards, including best R&B album. His debut, 1995's Brown Sugar, was also a platinum effort. Since that, D'Angelo has stepped away from the music scene, drawing attention for his run-ins with the law.

Comedy

The Avengers

Director. Joss Whedon

Stars. Robert Downey Jr., Chris Evans, Scarlett Johansson

Great comic book movies, like great comic books, have to play their heroes and villains straight. The stakes have to be high and in the case of Marvel's The Avengers, the fate of the planet literally hangs in the balance. The humour is innately there (a bunch of costumed superheroes hanging out together is already absurd) but in director Joss Whedon's mammoth budgeted blockbuster, the humour is of the nudging, winking variety, almost as if Whedon is trying to convince the audience that he's smarter than the material. It's an obnoxious trait that bogs down what could have been a perfect mash up.

CHRIS ALEXANDER

Quoted

"It did actually really scare me to step into this world and I didn't know that I could pull it off. It took some convincing from people like (co-star) Robert (Downey Jr.) and Joss. The thing that I was always worried about was just getting pigeon-holed by a big part like this. But now I'm at a point where I have a big enough body of work where this isn't going to make me or break me, really. It'll help, in a lot of ways."

Mark Ruffalo, talking about stepping into the role of the Hulk in The Avengers.

Legend of a Warrior. Documentary deconstructs father-son relationship

Forged in a harsh Hong Kong ghetto, Frank Lee came to Canada in 1960 and worked overnights at the rough and tumble Phoenix Cafe in Edmonton.

He was a waiter/busboy/bouncer and, as miscreants soon found out, a very talented martial artist. When trouble started, he ended it. Tough as nails, the five-foot-seven 155-pounder never lost a fight.

He went on to become a martial arts grandmaster out of the Edmonton gym dubbed Frank's Torture Chamber. And he trained champions half a world away in Thailand and Hong Kong.

Along the way, his family drifted apart.

So son Corey — a filmmaker — set about to reconnect.

In 2011, he started training under his father, returning to the martial arts he had abandoned more than two decades before.

"He is my father. But I don't really know the man. I only know the legend," Corey says early on in Legend of a Warrior, which had its world premiere at the Hot Docs festival this week.

Cameras captured their time together over some seven months.

"I was hoping for some level of healing and some level of understanding," Corey, now 42, said in an interview this week.

He got that and more in an emotional journey that is lovingly captured in the 78-minute documentary.

The National Film Board project starts as a guarded father-son reunion in the ring at Frank's gym. But emotional walls are torn down later in the film during a trip to Hong Kong, where Frank first studied martial arts after leaving China with his family at the age of nine.

Tears flow as Frank rereads a letter he sent Corey from Hong Kong in February 1983 on yet another training mission that had taken him from his family. The man who can bend rebar with his neck or break cinder blocks with his hands cries as he laments the breakup of his family — or "crystal ball" as he calls it.

It is heart-rending stuff and it's a safe bet that many more tears will be shed by those watching it.

Corey Lee. THE CANADIAN PRESS

In talking about the scene, Corey is clearly wearing two hats as filmmaker and son.

"I was thankful that we got it on film, for sure," he said.

"And I think I was just incredibly humbled by my father's honesty with me ... I hoped after reading that letter that it would inspire him to open up to me in a way. But I wouldn't have imagined that it would have been like that."

Jaime Cepero has had fun shaping the character of Ellis. HANDOUT

Cepero dishes on the biggest swindler in showbiz — Ellis

Smash. Ambition and a taste for the finer things in life drives villainous character

T. MICHELLE MURPHY
Metro World News in New York

"By the end of this season, the Ellis gun goes off," Jaime Cepero tells us about his deliciously villainous character on NBC's Smash. We interviewed him to find out more about how the everyone's favourite showbiz swindler.

So despite all the grief we give him in our recaps, Ellis is one of our favourite characters on Smash. And he gets some of the best storylines on the show. Do you agree?
Yeah, absolutely. I think the most exciting thing about this character for me, as an actor, was that he's really undefined as you go into the series.

It sets the platform to kind of go anywhere I want, in as far as storyline.

And it's been really interesting to watch him grow and get a new script each week and see where this kid is going.

A lot of the other characters are very defined when you go into the series, and he's very special in that sense.

He's also painted as a villain — but do you think he accurately represents a certain type of person in show business?
I've definitely met some Ellises in my day! I think that's why there's such a strong reaction to the character, because no matter what business you're in — whether you're in theatre or anywhere — you know this person.

We all know an Ellis who's overly ambitious, and really brownnosing the boss, and kind of slips up under your radar. I think that's why people are really responding in such a [strong] way, because we all know this person.

We know Ellis is ambitious, but why? What's his driving factor?
I think as the series goes on, you kind of get more definition about why he is so ambitious.

He starts working for Tom and Julia at first, and he's working for people of this caliber, and he's very intrigued by this world he's working in.

He's getting to see how these people are treated and how much money they're making — he sees all the facts, because he's the assistant, he sees all the numbers. I think he gets a taste of this world, he gets a taste of these lavish parties, and he wants it for himself because he's never had it before. That's very attractive for him. By all means necessary, he's going to pursue those things for himself.

Bird breaks through with Break It Yourself

New music. Latest songs plot songwriter's trajectory from a breakup in Chicago to a new life in New York

LINDA LABAN
Metro World News

One week after Andrew Bird filmed an appearance on Jimmy Kimmel Live! in Los Angeles, the singer-songwriter and violinist is back home in New York with his segment due to air that night.

Apart from Saturday Night Live, Bird has done just about all the late night TV shows. "Colbert was a high point," he says, admitting he's a big Stephen Colbert fan. He's confident that SNL will happen "in due time."

And Bird is due. Break It Yourself has just been released.

"I call it my ninth album," Bird says. "It's the ninth album that's had a cycle to it. There's been a live record and soundtracks. If you count them all up, there's probably 15 or 16."

Andrew Bird. GETTY IMAGES

That includes his pre-solo outfit Andrew Bird's Bowl of Fire, which highlighted the 38-year-old's love of pre-war jazz before his singer-songwriter turn. Bird's future work, however, might take yet another musical twist.

"I continue to write songs that make sense as an Andrew Bird record, but I hear things that I don't know how to pull off yet. All I can say is what I am hearing is less pop-oriented and more devotional or religious. Not religious in the sense of 'Jesus I love you,'" he emphasizes.

"It seems like it might be time to do something a little different."

The antisocial network

Andrew Bird is a Chicago native, but has called New York City home for almost two years. Break It Yourself plots his trajectory from a breakup to a new life there.

"I don't tend to write songs where there's any mention of breaking any hearts. There's a theme on the record of being self-contained, self-satisfied, I suppose.

"A lot of New Yorkers are experts at that. I'm puzzling through whether that's a virtue, not needing anyone else. I've got my own solitary, antisocial leanings. I'm kind of questioning those on the record."

Amber Riley strikes back

Let's hear it for Glee star Amber Riley. After a red carpet fainting spell earlier in the week, she's on the (hilarious) defensive about her personal life — including whether or not she's expecting.

"Let me stop the rumour mill right now. I'm not pregnant. Yes, I'm black but I don't have diabetes, I don't starve myself to fit clothes; I buy clothes to fit me not vice versa," Riley posted to Twitter in response to the rumours that sprouted up overnight after her episode.

"I did get a great laugh this morning reading all the BS, though."

Cut it out Cameron, it's just some hair

A recent rushed visit to a hairdresser friend left Cameron Diaz with much shorter locks than expected — and tears in her eyes.

"I started crying. I felt so vulnerable. For a woman to all of a sudden have no hair — oh my God," she tells Jay Leno during an interview. "There was a little misunderstanding. I said I just want a little bit cut off."

But a bit quickly turned into a bob, which turned traumatic for all involved.

"She started crying. I started crying. A couple other people started crying. I ended up writing her a few emails over the next few days assuring her I was OK," Diaz says.

Poor Popchips. They just wanted to get people to eat their unique snack food (a.k.a. communion wafers with salt) but their recent online ad campaign is backfiring spectacularly.

The face of the campaign, Ashton Kutcher, is currently facing criticism for his roles in the commercials that many feel are racist, according to E! News. In the online video, Kutcher appears as numerous ridiculous characters, including Raj, a brown-faced Bollywood producer with a thick Indian accent. (Kutcher also appears as a character sending up Karl Lagerfeld that could be construed as homophobic.)

Overwhelmingly negative responses to the advertisement prompted Popchips to remove it from YouTube and Facebook a day after it was released.

"The new Popchips worldwide dating video and ad campaign featuring four characters was created to provoke a few laughs and was never intended to stereotype or offend anyone," a company rep said in a statement to the Hollywood Reporter.

Here's the thing someone should have told Popchips: Kutcher can't act. At all. His version of "acting" is basically over the top parody — all the time. So when he gets tapped to portray someone of a different race, even in a comedic role, of course it will be seen as mockery/racism. The only actor who could tackle this without getting in trouble? Sir Ben Kingsley. Popchips, get that guy on the phone ASAP.

Lady Gaga single again

Lady Gaga and boyfriend Taylor Kinney have reportedly called it quits, with the culprit being the singer's hectic schedule, according to Us Weekly.

"She will be touring nonstop until next year and has found she can't have a relationship at the same time," a source says of Gaga, who is about to embark on a 110-stop tour.

"There's just no room for anything else. Her work is all-consuming." Of course, to hear the source tell it, the relationship might not have lasted much longer on its own, anyway. "Taylor was all about himself, a typical actor, and didn't completely get Gaga," the source says.

Miley makes a dog Happy

Miley Cyrus added a fourth dog to her pet roster after finding a Rottweiler-Beagle mix abandoned outside a shopping centre, she revealed on Twitter.

"He was left in a box in front of Walmart," Cyrus posted. "I don't understand how people can be so cruel. That's why we named him Happy."

Cyrus spent the rest of the day posting photos of Happy enjoying his new environment.

I've had a long standing respect for tequila, but the distilled output of agave plants is by no means the only booze stamped "Made in Mexico".

With Cinco de Mayo celebrations a day away and Salma Hayek shilling for Burger King, south of the border (the American one at least) things are heating up.

Sadly, the country's superstar brand — Corona Extra (6x330 ml, $12.95 - $14.09) — gets a bum rap from beer aficionados thanks to its lean-bodied flavour and clear glass bottle (which fanatics swear allows natural light to affect its flavour).

Whatever you believe, Corona is a great beer to have with any food that's eclectic — especially if it's spicy.

Of course, the last thing I would do is allow a bartender to jam a wedge of lime into any Corona bottle I've ordered. They may seem to go together like Brad and Angelina but the union of lime and liquid really began as a way to keep flies out of an opened bottle. It turns out that the acidity in the citrus makes them bug off.

Carne Asada with Confetti Salsa. The combination of fruity salsa & marinated meat makes this the perfect Mexican meal

The more time the sirloin tips bathe in this recipe's punchy marinade of lime juice, Worcestershire sauce and garlic, the better. So while it calls for marinating the meat for about two hours, don't hesitate to toss them in as you head out to work in the morning. You'll be rewarded when you get home and crank up the grill.

To save time, you could substitute a mango or other fruity jarred salsa for the one made as part of this recipe. If you have time, this salsa is a chunky hodge-podge of bell pepper, tomatillos, avocado, mango, tomato and red onion, with a bit of heat from a chipotle chili in adobo.

1. In a large zip-close bag, combine the sirloin tips, lime juice, salt, Worcestershire sauce, olive oil, black pepper and garlic cloves. Shake to coat the meat. Refrigerate for two hours.

2. Meanwhile, in a large bowl combine the bell pepper, tomatillos, avocado, mango, tomato, red onion, chipotle, adobo sauce, garlic, lime juice and cilantro. Stir well, then season with salt and black pepper. Refrigerate for 30 minutes before serving.

3. When ready to cook the steak, heat a grill to high.

4. Drain the meat, discarding the marinade. Use paper towels to pat the meat dry. Sear on the grill, about four minutes per side for medium-rare. Serve with the confetti salsa.

Ingredients

For the meat:
- 2 pounds sirloin tips
- 2 tbsp lime juice
- 1 tsp salt
- 2 tbsp Worcestershire sauce
- 2 tbsp olive oil
- 1 tsp black pepper
- 2 cloves garlic, smashed

For the salsa:
- 1 yellow pepper, cored, diced
- 3 tomatillos, diced
- 1 avocado, pitted and diced
- 1 mango, pitted and diced
- 1 large tomato, diced
- 1/2 small red onion, diced
- 1 chipotle in adobo sauce, minced
- 1 tbsp adobo sauce
- 1 garlic clove, minced
- 3 tablespoons lime juice
- 1/4 cup chopped cilantro
- Salt and ground black pepper

Mole Chicken Enchiladas. Made easy

1. In blender, combine onion, garlic, almond butter, water, broth, tomatoes, bread, hot sauce, cocoa powder, chili powder, cumin, cinnamon and lime juice. Blend until smooth, then transfer to sauté pan. Bring to simmer over medium heat, stirring often, and cook for eight minutes. Taste, then season with salt and pepper.

2. Add chicken to pan and stir well. Return to simmer and cook just until heated through.

3. Wrap tortillas in damp paper towel, then microwave for 20 seconds, or until tender.

4. One at a time, spoon some of the mole chicken filling down the centre of each tortilla. Roll, then arrange on a serving platter. Repeat with remaining tortillas and filling. Spoon a bit more of the filling over the rolled enchiladas, then crumble the queso blanco over them.

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Ingredients

- 1 small onion, quartered
- 1 clove garlic
- 1 cup almond butter
- 1 cup water
- 1/2 cup chicken broth
- 1/2 cup diced tomatoes
- 1 slice soft sandwich bread
- 1 tbsp hot sauce
- 1 tbsp cocoa powder
- 1 tsp ancho chili powder
- 1/2 tsp ground cumin
- 1/4 tsp cinnamon
- Juice of 1 lime
- Salt and black pepper
- Meat from a 2-lb rotisserie chicken, pulled into bite-size pieces
- 8 corn tortillas
- 1/2 cup crumbled queso blanco cheese (shredded cheddar or Jack cheese can be substituted)

3 LIFE

History

Celebration

Cinco de Mayo celebrates the victory of the Mexican Army over the French at the Battle of Puebla in 1862. Celebrations include not only wonderful Mexican foods, but also parades, mariachi music and folk dancing.

Traditional Mexican cuisine varies vastly from region to region in Mexico.

The earliest Mexican agricultural staples were beans, squash and chili peppers, with corn arriving some 2,000 years later. Staples expanded to include avocados, coconuts, tomatoes, sweet potatoes, peanuts, chia seeds, and more varieties of beans.

The herb of choice was usually epazote, similar to cilantro in its strong, pungent flavours. Meanwhile, meats included turkeys, ducks, quail, peccaries, pigeons, and a wide variety of fish and shellfish.

Early traditional dishes included atole (porridge), tortilla, tamales (filled pastries, both savory and sweet) and soups. The cuisine has expanded to include a wide variety of dishes way beyond burritos, tacos and salsa.

NHL. Overtime win puts New Jersey into driver's seat vs. Philly

Alexei Ponikarovsky scored on his own rebound with 2:39 left in overtime and the New Jersey Devils defeated the Philadelphia Flyers, 4-3, Thursday night to take a 2-1 lead in this Eastern Conference semifinal series.

Patrik Elias, Ilya Kovalchuk and Zach Parise also scored for the Devils, who killed off two penalties in overtime before Ponikarovsky came through with his first goal of the postseason on a backhander that sneaked past Ilya Bryzgalov on his left side.

"I didn't have time to celebrate because everyone jumped on me right away, but I had a great time in the pile," said Ponikarovsky, whose goal was set up by a wonderful pass from Kovalchuk that forged a 2-on-1 break into the zone.

Martin Brodeur made 25 saves for New Jersey, which will look to take a 3-1 lead in the best-of-seven series Sunday in East Rutherford.

Kovalchuk, who missed Game 2 with a lower body injury, also had two assists in his return with none more important than his pass that caught the Flyers on a bad change.

"You feel pressure," Kovalchuk said after watching the Devils win Game 2 while he nursed a back injury. "The guys played so well, and you don't want to get back in the lineup because you just want to play."

Game 3

Devils	Flyers

Kovalchuk more than showed he was ready, though.

Danny Briere, Matt Carle and Brayden Schenn tallied for the Flyers. Bryzgalov had 27 saves.

"We're down 2-1, the pressure is on us," Flyers forward Claude Giroux said. "There is no guy on this team that is going to quit. It's going to be a wake-up call.

"We have a good series now."

Schenn nearly won the game eight minutes into overtime with a deflection in front and then the Devils' penalty kill did an outstanding job after a controversial boarding call against Dainius Zubrus with 11:37 left in the overtime and a delay-of-game penalty against Bryce Salvador. New Jersey had problems with its short-handed lines in Round 1 versus Florida, but the unit that was ranked No. 1 in the regular season appears to have regained its form.

"I think the power play won us a lot of games this year and tonight wasn't the case," Giroux said. "We have to do a better job."

The power play is actually killing the Flyers, who are 2-for-16 in this series after going 12-for-23 against the Penguins. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Getzlaf to captain team Canada

Ryan Getzlaf will wear the "C" for Canada at the IIHF World Hockey Championship.

The veteran forward from Regina was selected as captain during a team meeting on the eve of the tournament.

Getzlaf is also the captain of the NHL's Anaheim Ducks and is one of three members of the Canadian team that won gold at the 2010 Olympics.

Dion Phaneuf and Patrick Sharp will serve as alternate captains.

Torres to appeal 25-game ban

Phoenix Coyotes forward Raffi Torres is appealing the length of his 25-game suspension.

Torres was penalized last month after landing a late hit on Chicago forward Marian Hossa. Torres and the NHLPA will meet with commissioner Gary Bettman about the length of the suspension, but not the ban itself. The NHLPA said there's no date for the meeting, but the collective bargaining agreement stipulates the commissioner "will endeavour to rule promptly on any such appeal." THE CANADIAN PRESS

Heat beat up on short-handed Knicks

Miami's LeBron James guards Carmelo Anthony in New York on Thursday night. JEFF ZELEVANSKY/GETTY IMAGES

LeBron James scored 32 points, including eight straight to start the fourth quarter and break open the game, and the Miami Heat took a 3-0 lead, sending the New York Knicks to an NBA post-season-record 13th straight loss, with a 87-70 win on Thursday night.

James had 17 points in the final period for the Heat, who held the short-handed Knicks to eight field goals in the second half and will go for the sweep Sunday afternoon.

Dwyane Wade added 20 points for the Heat and Mario Chalmers had 19, hitting consecutive three-pointers in the fourth quarter when the Heat finally brought some beauty to what had been an ugly game.

Carmelo Anthony scored 22 points on seven of 23 shots for the Knicks, who are playing without Amare Stoudemire, Jeremy Lin and Iman Shumpert and needed a super effort from Anthony he didn't come close to providing.

The Knicks broke the record set by Memphis from 2004-06. They haven't won a playoff game since April 29, 2001, Game 3 of a best-of-five series against Toronto.
